Ron Haviv

Award-winning photojournalist Ron Haviv has produced images of conflict and humanitarian crises from around the world that have made headlines since the end of the Cold War.

Numerous museums and galleries have featured his work, including The Louvre, the United Nations, and the Council on Foreign Relations. A co-founder of the photo agency VII, his work is published by magazines worldwide. He has published two critically acclaimed collections of his photography - Blood and Honey: A Balkan War Journal and Afghanistan: On the Road to Kabul.

Haviv has been the central character in three films including National Geographic Explorer's Freelance in a World of Risk that explores the hazards inherent in combat photography. In addition, Haviv has spoken about his work on NPR, NBC Nightly News, MSNBC, The Charlie Rose Show, Good Morning America, ABC World News Tonight and CNN.

Simon Winchester

Simon Winchester, author, journalist, and broadcaster, has worked as a foreign correspondent for most of his career, although he graduated from Oxford in 1966 with a degree in geology and spent a year working as a geologist in the Ruwenzori Mountains in western Uganda, and on oil rigs in the North Sea, before joining his first newspaper in 1967.

His journalistic work, mainly for The Guardian and The Sunday Times, has based him in Belfast, Washington DC, New Delhi, New York, London, and Hong Kong, where he covered such stories as the Ulster crisis, the creation of Bangladesh, the fall of President Marcos, the Watergate affair, the Jonestown Massacre, the assassination of Egypt's President Sadat, the recent death and cremation of Pol Pot and, in 1982 the Falklands War. During this conflict he was arrested on spying charges and spent three months in an Argentine prison in Ushuaia, Tierra del Fuego. He has been a freelance writer since 1987.

He now works principally as an author, although he contributes to a number of American and British magazines and journals, including Harper's, Lapham's Quarterly, Smithsonian Magazine, National Geographic, The Spectator, Granta, The New York Times and The Atlantic Monthly.

He writes and presents television films - including a series on the final years of colonial Hong Kong and on a variety of other historical topics - and is a frequent contributor to the BBC radio program, From Our Own Correspondent. Winchester also lectures widely - most recently before London's Royal Geographical Society - and to audiences aboard cruise liners.

His books cover a wide range of subjects, including a study of outposts of the British Empire today, the colonial architecture of India, aristocracy, the American Midwest, his experiences in an Argentine prison on spying charges, his description of a six-month walk through the Korean peninsula, the Pacific Ocean and the future of China. Most recently he has written The River at the Center of the World, about China's Yangtze River; the best-selling The Professor and the Madman; and The Meaning of Everything, both about the making of the Oxford English Dictionary; The Fracture Zone; A Return to the Balkans, which recounts his journey from Austria to Turkey during the 1999 Kosovo crisis; the best-selling The Map that Changed the World, about the nineteenth-century geologist William Smith; Krakatoa: The Day the World Exploded: August 27, 1883; A Crack in the Edge of the World: America and the Great California Earthquake of 1906; and, finally, The Man Who Loved China. His next book, to be published in late 2010, is Atlantic: A Biography of the Ocean.

For services to literature and journalism Simon Winchester was made Officer of the Order of the British Empire, OBE, by Queen Elizabeth II in 2006. He was made Honorary Fellow of St. Catherine's College, Oxford, in 2009.

Simon Winchester lives in New York City and on a small farm in the Berkshires in Massachusetts.
